

Cross with Caution

A pedestrian's list of busy intersections in New York City's five boroughs, with tips to cross streets more safely.

MTA New York City Transit wants you to be a safe, well-informed customer and pedestrian. Safety awareness can prevent accidents.

This brochure lists the intersections, by borough, with the highest number of incidents involving buses, other vehicles and pedestrians. Nearly 500 incidents involving either pedestrians or other vehicles were reported in the 12 months between January 2006 and December 2006. Crossing any street requires your full attention, but the streets on this list require extra caution.

OUR DRIVERS...

At NYC Transit, we celebrate our bus operators' safe-driving skills with an annual Safe Bus Operator Appreciation Day. Drivers who are accident free for three or more consecutive years are honored. Most recently, 1500 such operators were recognized.

Here are just a few examples of our safety programs:

- Every bus operator receives an annual safety refresher course at our Training Center.
- Bus operators must take a New York State 19A road test every two years.
- The Bus Command Center makes daily announcements to bus operators concerning safety.

We promote safe-driving in a variety of ways as part of a comprehensive internal safety campaign. This brochure is an extension of that effort.

Be an extra cautious pedestrian:

- Never assume the bus operator sees you.

On the street, anything from lamp-posts, newsstands, and double-parked vehicles can cause blind spots and/or obscure the bus operator's view.

- Don't cross the street between parked cars.

When you walk between parked cars into traffic, you might not be visible to drivers. Walk defensively. Cross at the corner, when the traffic sign indicates you can go.

- Stand back as the bus gets closer.

Your natural response may be to get nearer to the curb as your bus comes into view. You are much safer moving a few steps back until the bus comes to a complete stop.
