

Map details show major transit hubs diagrammatically. For legibility, route lines are combined by route type, where appropriate. Consult individual route timetables for details.

Your Riding Options

The MTA provides four types of local bus service: local, limited, rush, and SBS (Select Bus Service), moving more than 2 million bus riders in New York City every weekday. More buses, less waiting.

- Local: Blue route-number labels indicate local routes. Local buses make frequent stops across the city, connecting neighborhoods with transit hubs and key destinations.
- Limited: Red route-number labels indicate limited routes. Limited buses only stop at major destinations, main cross streets, and key transfer points, to connect quickly across the city.
- Rush: Purple route-number labels indicate rush routes. Rush routes make local stops in outer neighborhoods, and then make fewer stops, typically only at major transfer points and key destinations, as they approach the subway. These rush segments also provide underlying local service.
- Select Bus Service+: Teal route-number labels indicate Select Bus Service routes. SBS buses boast all-day high-frequency bus service, only stop at major destinations, main cross streets, and key transfer points, and use busways or dedicated bus lanes on a significant portion of their length to decrease travel time.

The fare for Select Bus Service is the same as a local bus. If you use coins, pay the fare before you board at a payment kiosk and save your paper ticket to show if requested by a fare inspector. To tap and ride, tap your payment method as you board.

Regardless of how you pay, you can board SBS buses at any door, and you must present your ticket or payment method to a fare inspector upon request.
